Let Me Be Frank With You. "The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey" Described As Sad And Square Christmas Movie. "Top Gear" Reveals India Bound Tesla Model S. "Coming Out-The Laramie Project" Written By Diablo Cody.Q: Schedule a backup script daily, but run it only once per day and only on the main drive I am asking a very specific question: I have to back up one of our servers nightly, but on the main drive. The reason is we have a lot of old software (stuff we no longer use) that we don't want to mess up if we choose to restore it. What I was thinking of is using a scheduled task on a server, for example, set it to run every night at midnight, but it should only run on the main drive, not the RAID one. I was thinking of a batch script, for example on the following link, with the following information:

date=%G homedirectory=C:\Backup sourceDrive=C:\
destDrive=%homedirectory%\Backups
username=DOMAIN\User password=PASWD

Any ideas? I would rather not run a backup every time a user logs into the server, if it is possible. Thanks A: Use Robocopy for this; it can look in the Windows event log for newly created directories, and if it sees one, it will copy those directories over to the server. It can also be run manually from the command line. Basically, it can do everything you need as long as it uses the same account that you are logged in as, and it can be set up to do exactly what you describe. To tell you the truth, I'm not sure if it's standing or sitting that makes a person more noticeable, especially when it comes to the table. I mean, how many times have you been at a party and the guests ignore the person sitting next to them and look straight at you, instead of your spouse or partner? The new trend of sitting at the table looks like it could make the Maitre D' of your next party stand out on the dance floor. As the guest of honor, your Maitre D' will have your back and be there to greet the guests when they come in. I watched a video of Mr. Pink looking absolutely
