The violence which began in January has been marred by alleged human rights abuses. FREETOWN, Nov 19 (Reuters) - This smoldering forest in eastern Sierra Leone is home to at least 1,000 people -- mostly women and children -- who have fled a battle between government forces and rebels on their way to a refugee camp. Villagers say that as the conflict worsened, young men died or disappeared. After burning down the chief's village, the rebels began to kill adults and children. Some 300 people have already died. The Revolutionary United Front (RUF), a rebel group now disarmed and in the process of joining a peace deal with Sierra Leone's government, began attacking Famboya village in the slum-like suburb of Kenema, because it believed that locals were collaborating with the government. In recent days, those people left their homes and 3ef4e8ef8d
