Twenty patients with biopsy-proven hepatocellular carcinoma were treated with 2 million IU interferon-alpha (IFN-alpha) daily for 2-3 months. No patient had a clinically significant response to IFN-alpha, with the only observed changes being in tumor size (average 1.1 cm decrease) and/or number (average 0.18 decrease). Overall survival after IFN-alpha therapy was 21% at 6 months and 6% at 1 year. Sixteen patients (80%) had pathological or clinical evidence of active hepatitis. IFN-alpha therapy was well-tolerated with mild clinical effects including dryness of the mouth, arthralgia, fatigue, and anorexia; no patient had a severe effect of therapy. In conclusion, IFN-alpha does not improve survival in patients with hepatocellular carcinoma, and the mild clinical effects observed indicate that IFN-alpha may be a poor choice for first-line palliative therapy.Eucalyptus gremiana Eucalyptus gremiana, commonly known as gremlin mallee is a species of mallee that is endemic to Western Australia.
