In particular, the present invention relates to a wind turbine which is enhanced in manufacturing efficiency, lowering wind speed threshold, reducing weight, size, and for lowering the cost of installation. Description of Related Art Recently, there has been an extensive use of electric power consumption. In view of the need to decrease the energy consumption, wind power generation, which does not generate carbon dioxide, has been developed. A wind turbine converts kinetic energy of wind into mechanical energy to be output by a turbine of a generator in which electricity is generated. The wind turbine typically includes a wind turbine tower made of steel or concrete. The wind turbine tower is supported by a foundation which is fixedly installed on the ground and reinforced with respect to an uplifted load of the wind turbine tower. In general, the foundation is made of concrete and cast and installed before the construction of the wind turbine tower. Due to a constraint of the construction period of the wind turbine and a need to reduce the manufacturing cost, the construction period of the wind turbine tower is typically longer than that of the foundation. Therefore, it is advantageous for the construction period of the wind turbine tower to be longer than that of the foundation if the wind turbine tower can be constructed in a manner of the construction period of the wind turbine tower being longer than that of the foundation. However, in order to satisfy such a need, there is a problem in that reinforcing construction for strength in the wind turbine tower may become excessively rigid, and thus the weight of the wind turbine tower may increase, the life span of the wind turbine tower may decrease, and the fabrication cost of the wind turbine tower may increase. As the weight of the wind turbine increases, when it is installed on the foundation, the installation strength of the wind turbine tower is decreased. As a result, there is a problem in that the wind turbine tower may be deformed during installation and the installation time of the wind turbine tower may be prolonged. Further, when the weight of the wind turbine tower increases, since the wind turbine tower is heavy and has a large volume, installation of the wind turbine tower increases the installation time of the wind turbine tower. Further, when the weight of the wind turbine tower increases, during the construction of the foundation, the time and cost for installation may increase due
