The present invention relates to a hermetic compressor, and more particularly to a method of treating the oil mist attached to the inner surface of a compressing part of the hermetic compressor. In hermetic compressors the oil contained in the refrigerant oil (refrigerant oil/water or water) lubricates the sliding parts of a hermetic housing, a compressor and a condensing tube. However, the refrigerant oil attached to the sliding parts becomes solidified or solid substance, oil mist is generated in the hermetic compressor and conveyed to a condensing system, and causes a problem that the refrigerating effect of the refrigerant (gas) is reduced. In the past, in order to reduce the refrigerant oil discharged from the hermetic compressor to the outside of the compressor, for example, a method of inserting a discharged tube connected to a discharge port into a vacuum chamber and decompressing the discharged refrigerant oil therein has been considered. Since, however, the refrigerant oil attached to the sliding parts is decompressed only into liquid, the refrigerant oil in the solidified or solid substance state is not removed sufficiently. Further, the method in which the refrigerant oil discharged from the compressor is decompressed into the vacuum chamber and is then returned to the compressor is not applicable to a hermetic compressor which compresses the gas using the liquid refrigerant. An object of the present invention is to provide a method of decomposing solidified refrigerant oil attached to a hermetic compressor to liquid. To achieve the above object, according to the present invention, there is provided a method of treating the 3e33713323
