The warning applies to the Wasatch Front, including all of Salt Lake, Summit and Summit county; parts of Weber, Davis, Cache, Morgan, Uintah and Wasatch counties, and the northern suburbs of Ogden and Layton. As the storm moved east, snow began falling in higher elevations, with up to 4 inches being reported on the west side of the Wasatch Range in Weber county by Monday afternoon. Plow crews were making steady progress in central and northern Utah on Monday night, bringing roads nearly free of snowfall. Sierra Avalanche Center issued a snow advisory for all of Utah on Monday, advising that snow accumulations of 2 to 4 feet were possible. North and east winds had slowed, resulting in a window of opportunity for heavy snowfall in Utah. The lower elevations will have snowfall amounts of 1 to 4 inches, and the higher elevations will have storm accumulations of 5 to 8 inches. Snow and rain will continue to develop in western Nevada on Monday, with snow developing in the northern part of the state by Tuesday. By Tuesday afternoon, snow showers will continue to produce heavy rain throughout southern and central parts of the state. A weather synopsis for the week ahead can be found here.
