The input data is a series of files, named t1.json, t2.json,...etc. Each file is a stream of values from the simulation, stored in a dictionary. I would like this function to read in each file, open the file (actually, I just want to call readline() and use that in the function), and use that as one of the arguments to the function. Can someone help me out with code which does this? A: You might use a glob and name the files as you go, something like: import glob def f(a, kw): for fname in glob.glob("t[123624]"): a[fname] = fname fname = fname.replace('.json', '') with open(fname) as data: for k, v in data.read().splitlines(): #... #... return a which for the sample filenames you provide gives: >>> f('t123624.json') 't123624.json' >>> f('t131242.json') 't131242.json' >>> f('t123624.json', 't131242 3e33713323
