Liantan anak buah.Pupil size as a physiological sign of attention for young children. Many studies report that children's attentional skills develop quickly after infancy. To test this hypothesis, we measured the attentional skills of young children, by measuring the size of their pupils in response to highly salient events, using the EyeLink eye-tracking system. Participants were 7-month-old infants, 5-year-old children, and adults. Participants were presented with films depicting audiovisual events. The events included a short video clip showing a task-unrelated person presented in the background, either alone or with
