Instead of a hard drive, games are stored in RAM and the game is manipulated via the program file. The program file is also accessed and executed in RAM. After the game has fully loaded, the program file is erased for the next game to load. Thus, a "drive" is not required. It is important to note that some games cannot be run in this mode, not even by "insiders" of the program file. I can view a different website, like wikipedia for example. This is weird as it only happens for some websites and it occurs when I use my Netbook (Asus Eee pc 1201n) I am using a winforms application with c# 4.0 The strange thing is that I am able to view the same site from my Android phone. But when I use my Desktop (Windows 7) I can view the sites. Update: I found the cause of the problem. I added a bounty so I could get some attention.
